General Mahone on National Issues. A gentieman of St. Paul, Minn., form rig an intimate fliend of General Mahone, lately addressed to him a letter inquiring his views upon the substitution of some other method of choosing president than that of national conven tions and electoral colleges. The reply is a fall discussion of the subject, and contains some passages showing incidentally Gen. Mahone's position upon the questions of State and naional sovereignty, and the future of the South.

best subserve their own promision under the upport. The theory of the government is an antagonism with both congressional and national caucuses or conventious, and the remidy | ties, at and here comes the difficulty-, hose who would control the electoral machinere were imtuad with a loftier patitotism than those who now Parties would still exist and party ends would sell control, and at last the State Eccoral Board might become more recorders of party fis. Yet, withal, this might not be quite so full of evilus congressional canonses or national conventions. There is no desire to retuin to quire a return to it or the worse agencies-state lugislative caucus s?

'I regard national conventions in the same light as you do. I would abolish them and toke the chance of a better made for the selec tion of pational rulers, and while the better. and it may be the best, mode is that surgested by you, I hardly think it would work out better results until we aball go below the surface and reach down to the prople themselves (the seat of power), and stimulate them to act for themselves and by thems lves in the execution of the great set of a vereigny-the choice of their agents to do their will-and the wirk of reformation must be begun at the very bottom, at the fountain head of all political power. To commence it aright and complete it fully wo musi educate the people, not only to the true understanding of their rights as freemen, but 20 prizes to their ducies and respons bi i.ies as such-a sure process; slow, indeed, and possibly too slow for the exigencies of the occasion. Were some few of the states to resolve on the referm while the bulk held to the . xis tog practice, w would have the choice of President remitted to the lower House of Congress, an evil evon creater than any system heretofore praticed. It might be that by changing the F. deral Con stitution so that the election of president might be directed by the people, that it should ap proximate nearer the real condition of the country resultant upon the late civil wer, which practically has declared that 'cation,' when applied to the Federal Government, should be spelled with a big N. This, of course, would support the idea that the sate elected the president and infringe on their rights of sovereignty-a claim whith is rather senti mental now than real-and yet when application is made, as is patent in Massacqueetts, to say when she demanded a change in cert-in provisons of the Federal Constitution as infurious to her honor and dignity, or as when she reluted so bid in a war which she regarded as prejud.coal to her interest may we not hope the end to which you look may be reached by another and probably, a more effictive wal—th.tis, by dropping abstractions, by cessing to run after theorems.
